Around 8 million things are shipped worldwide every single day. Around 80% of them are shipped in boxes, and 40% of those are shipped in re-usable containers. And if you've got a box full of stuff, you're likely to send a bunch of different items using a variety of shipping companies, each of whom makes its own rules. You'll have to make sure to pack each item properly and keep its records in a way that it can be re-sent at a later date, but there are a few ways to do this: Electronic payment, of course, is secure and reliable, but it's also a little cumbersome. Less money means less security, and the more your stuff is worth, the more vulnerable it is to theft. For stuff that isn't worth very much, a simple postal payment can be a secure alternative. For things that are worth more than $125, you can also send through an online money transfer service, like PayPal or Western Union. This is a secure way to send money online from one account to another, and you don't have to pull out your credit card. If you're interested in tracking your package, the Postal Service offers a basic tracking number. For more detailed tracking info, try the UPS or FedEx.com sites. This isn't the best way to track packages, though - they both offer one- or two-day tracking. Anything longer than that, and you'll have to track it the old-fashioned way. Once you've packed everything up, it's time to send your package to the post office. Many people assume that this is where your package will be sent, but don't count on it. A lot of people ignore the post office, and there's nothing wrong with that. However, in reality, the post office doesn't get your packages into the mail until they
