MASC Our challenge this month is to make something inspired by the snow.(Read more about it in the SRTD blog.) Since this month's challenge is to use snow as inspiration, I chose to make a design that uses the beautiful colours of a winter snowscape. I found that I was inspired by natural elements when I was little, so this design grew from a very intuitive idea into something that is unique to me as a person, as well as the house. I also decided to make some arrangements using small objects (as if they were snowflakes) instead of using actual snow. I chose to make three different arrangements using different colored forms: a circle, a square, and a triangular. I chose to incorporate some extra elements in the centre of the triangle arrangement, to add an extra dimension. I chose to arrange my handmade snowflakes in my handmade dish (which is usually used as a baking dish, but I turn it into a nice little covered dish). In the arrangement on the bottom left I used a custom clear acrylic mixing bowl that I made and painted - on the bottom right are four small mercury salt droppers that I made. On the top right is one from a set of ceramic characters that are themed around winter. I painted two pieces of white ceramic, the face and leg. I painted the face with acrylics and the leg with rubber stamps. I added a fluorescent yellow acrylic lenticular with a bit of simple penwork around the edge. On the top left is a small ceramic mortar and pestle and on the top right is a pretty silver apothecary jar. I then found cute little wooden chunks, and hammered them flat with a silver egg beater - the background is now dark, and the cylinder is purple. This is where the snowflakes start. I used cold press watercolour paper and printed the snowflakes on my ProGraph, using some of my old handmade acrylic paint and a brush. I then painted over the paper with acrylic paint and while it was still wet, used a Pantone colour pencil to add the white that makes up the cloud shape. I printed over it again, and painted with the same acrylic paint, using a character face mask on my ProGraph. I then finished by adding silver acrylic lenticulars around the face, and painting with my ProGraph's brushes and materials. In the centre of the board I used a Klingsor bonfire theme character and gathered objects I made together. The items that I collected were
